从申请上提供的信息，判断该书应该为中文图书，是中国古代思想家荀子的作品——《荀子：20卷》，出版时间为1621年。出版年代这么久远的原版古籍，在国内图书馆很难获取。检索美国哈佛大学图书馆的馆藏目录，检索到该书的馆藏。

Administrative / Biographical History

B L Coombes was born as Bertie Lewis Coombes Giffiths in 1893 in Wolverhampton. He was brought up in Herefordshire, but later moved to South Wales, settling in Resolven. Working in the mines before World War 1, he turned to writing when he was in his 40s, and was a protg of John Lehmann.

B L Coombes' works were responses to events and attitudes, he became a self appointed guardian of the truth about the mining industry and communities. The social, political, cultural and industrial context in which he was living must be understood to understand his writings and their impact and significance. Through his writings he spoke for the miners and families everywhere.

The works he best known for are These poor hands: the autobiography of a miner working in South Wales (London 1939), These clouded hills (London, 1944), Miners Day (Harmondsworth 1945).

Title:

Large-scale Computational/Experimental Distributed Simulation Framework

Author:

Huang, Xu

Department:

Civil Engineering

Issue Date:

Jun-2019

Abstract (summary):

Partitioned analysis methods have been mostly used in hybrid (experimental-numerical) simulations, multiphysics, and large-scale structure-media problems since they allow decomposition of a complex structural system into smaller subsystems. Although they have been considered to be superior to monolithic methods in terms of software reuse, difficulties still exist in the implementation process. This study addresses these difficulties and proposes a generalized integrated simulation framework to ease the coupling of the substructures analyzed with different Finite Element (FE) codes or tested with experimental specimens. This is enabled by the development of a generalized communication routine and the use of a staggered partitioned approach such that each involved program can act as a black box which is accessible only through standard model input and output, i.e. only boundary displacements and forces. In the simulation framework, the substructures to be integrated can be either quasi-statically or dynamically simulated which corresponds to the component-level and system-level decompositions of a system. The intent of the component-level and system-level decomposition methods are different. Specifically, the component-level decomposition method is aimed to capture the nonlinear hysteretic behaviour of critical structural components and consider their influence on the system's response. The system-level decomposition method, on the other hand, equally treats the partitions as independent dynamic substructures and it focuses on the dynamic interactions among the
